Gender inequality remains a pressing issue in India, despite considerable progress over the years. Deeply rooted in societal norms, this problem affects women in various aspects of life, from education and employment to political participation and healthcare. India's patriarchal society often restricts women's access to equal opportunities, perpetuating disparities in income, leadership roles, and social rights. Gender-based violence and discrimination further exacerbate these inequalities. Efforts are being made to combat gender inequality, including legislative measures, women's empowerment programs, and increased awareness.
